Mollie is an Associate in the firm's Insurance Recovery practice group, where she focuses on insurance coverage litigation and dispute resolution. She represents corporate policyholders in complex coverage matters, with particular experience handling high-stakes claims arising from construction projects and senior housing and care operations. Mollie handles disputes involving a broad range of first- and third-party insurance policies, such as builder's risk, business interruption, commercial general liability, commercial property, cyber, directors and officers and management liability, environmental and pollution liability, errors and omissions and professional liability, and wrap-up policies, including OCIPs and CCIPs.

In addition to advising clients on active insurance claims, Mollie assists clients with risk management strategies, identifies additional insurance coverage and contractual risk transfer opportunities, and evaluates policy provisions before clients place coverage. She advises clients on insurance and indemnity provisions in connection with contract negotiations.

Mollie also represents public sector clients in civil rights matters, including certified class actions involving the constitutional provision of medical and mental health care to incarcerated individuals. She advises public sector clients on corrections operations, including the constitutionality of service delivery and related risk considerations.
