Tom specializes in construction litigation, offering comprehensive legal services to clients involved in construction-related disputes. With a keen focus on the intricacies of construction law, he drafts detailed pleadings, discovery requests, and responses in matters concerning construction claims, contract disputes, and construction defect issues. His extensive experience includes advocating for clients in hearings and motions, ensuring their interests are represented effectively across multiple Bay Area Superior Courts.

In addition to his courtroom experience, Tom has represented both public entities and private companies in arbitration proceedings. He is versed in all aspects of construction payment disputes, including matters related to mechanic's liens, payment bonds, and breach of contract. His experience also extends to issues such as project delays, cost overruns, and defective workmanship.
